I thought I'd attach this to give you insight on an awesome therapeutic device small enough to fit in your pocket. Its predecessor was a medical device used by physicians in Russia. In the 70's, the Russian government poured millions of dollars into its development so it could be used in the cosmonaut program. Later, in 1986, it started being used in hospitals. When a Russian, Dr Yuri Gorfinkel passed away, they published his results on the internet that reviewed his usage of the device on his patients over the last 10 years. Out of the 18,663 patients he worked on, 88.5% had complete cure (he could use that word as a doctor) and 6.1% had significant improvement no matter what disease issue the patient had, for a total of 94.6%. He also listed how many had moderate, slight, and no improvement. Other items he recorded were how many therapies it took for each patient and how many minutes in duration each therapy took.

Selling as many as 25 of them every six weeks, we have trouble keeping them in stock. We start out by demonstrating how quickly it gets rid of or lowers a person's pain, whether the pain comes from arthritis, gout, migraine, menstrual cramps, acid reflux, sciatica, or a broken toe. Out of 70 people at an expo, I had them rate their initial pain level on a scale of 0-10 before a ten minute demonstration (not an actual therapy) and then re-rate it at the end of the ten minutes. There was only one out of the 70 that I wasn't able to get his pain down to a level two within the 10 minutes.

I had a client who'd had excellent success with her eight sessions on our $18,000 biofeedback device say she wished she could get her husband to come in for pain relief, but she didn't think he would come in. I told her to tell him if it didn't work, he didn't have to pay. When he came in, I told him my experience above on the 70 people. His response was "I'll be number two," in other words, "It won't work for me." His pain was caused from a judo incident when he was 17. He is now 74. Ever since the incident, he's had to go in the hospital to have it lanced. If he doesn't, the pain will start waking him up at night and prevent him from going back to sleep. I ran the therapy on him for ten minutes and totally got rid of his pain, asked him to stand then squat till he got his pain back again. Once again, I completely got rid of his pain. This time I had his interest. He started asking questions, "How much is it? How user friendly is it? What's the training like?" Then he told me, the night before he'd taught dance and tonight he'd teach dance again, that any time he taught dance two nights in a row, he would wake up in such severe pain, he could hardly stand it. So he said he'd see what he felt like in the morning.

He was the first person through the door the next morning, check in hand. He and his wife took my training. Two weeks later, they both ended up at my cash register. (They have a different sort of marriage. Even though they've been married over 20 years and are in their 70's, since they signed prenuptial agreements, his money is his, and her money is hers.) She was first in line, she ordered one of the pain relief devices. I asked, "Oh, did you find someone it worked with?" "Yes, it got rid of my sister's pain and now she wants one." "Cool." He was next in line. "Did you find someone it worked with?" "No. I have never been without pain in my life and I never want to have it back again, so I'm buying one as a backup." In one month, it'd taken him from being a skeptic to buying a second unit as a backup, just in case the company ever went out of business and he wouldn't be able to get another one!

It also works phenomenally for hair growth. One man used it on his head to assure himself that he wouldn't get Alzheimer's like his father had eight times in five months. He came in with a four and a half inch diameter bald spot and after the eight therapies, he left without so much as an 1/8th inch bald spot. There was a little more space between the hair follicles, so if he owned it and used it more, that would have even grown in. What also impressed me was that the color and texture were the same as the rest of his hair.

I told that to another client that bought both the device and the LIFE system. When she came back the following week for training, I had her as well as all of my other students, stand up, introduce themselves, and say what experiences they'd had on either device. She said that after one week of use her husband who'd been totally bald on top, now had peach fuzz all over the top of his head. Pretty awesome!

The Avazzia is also exceptional in the use of wrinkles, skin issues (scars, eczema, psoriasis, acne), and neuropathy. I could go on forever, so suffice it to say, "It works." I've attached a descriptive flier in an attachment. The Avazzia models range in price from $495-2750. Let me know if you would like to receive further information and I'll be happy to help you and your clinic to get up and running with this awesome therapeutic device that is small enough to fit in your pocket!
